BUDGET

HOUSE REPUBLICANS

REP. JASON SMITH, REPUBLICAN LEADER

When asked to defend a massive spending agenda, President Biden said:

"What would they have me cut? What would they have me leave out?"

We are glad you asked, Mr. President.

Parks and (Remote Access) Recreation

Boise, Idaho is spending $2 million from the American Rescue Plan to install free Wi-Fi in public parks – and, of course, for all the right reasons:

"...in the past, the city had conversations about adding digital informational materials through a phone app or augmented reality, like the popular game Pokemon Go, to help visitors learn about the environment, but they didn't want to implement the program unless anyone could use it..."

Because nothing enhances that great outdoors, one-with-nature experience like Pokemon Go. Oh, and at $2 million to the American taxpayer, this Wi-Fi is not exactly "free."

At least now park visitors can use their time relaxing under a shady hotspot to log-on and read about the many additional ways in which their federal tax dollars were used for purposes other than COVID under the Democrats' American Rescue Plan.

Stay tuned for more.
